

Sinclair's decision to broadcast an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a perfect example of why I previously opposed the FCC's proposal to weaken the anti-monopoly laws on media ownership.

We should in fact be taking steps away from such an Orwellian future by implementing more stringent laws around media ownership. This is fundamental to democracy.

Such a move by Sinclair would constitute a flagrant abuse of its broadcasting privilege. I would expect the FCC to take such outrageous partisan piracy of the airwaves into account during the license renewal of any stations involved.

I would also be interested in seeing how we can remove the imaginary cloak of objectivity from Fox News. Time and again this agency has put out partisan misinformation. Rather than news, it should be termed "op-ed," or some other designation so that viewers know they're getting a spin on events, rather than pure news.

Thank you.
